Market Overview

Up until mid-February 2020 when equity markets fell sharply as news emerged that the spread of the coronavirus was accelerating outside of China, it had generally been a positive year for global equities, albeit with a few bumps along the way. The rally was driven by US stocks, especially technology companies, as investors reacted favourably to a backdrop of a growing US economy, a strong labour market and better-than expected corporate earnings. European stocks also advanced higher but at a slower pace with the UK a laggard due to Brexit uncertainties. In Asia, a slowdown in global trade, accentuated by the growing Sino-US trade spat, did not derail the upswing in equity prices. Emerging markets also enjoyed modest gains, although Latin America struggled to keep up due to growing domestic political woes.

Although the Covid-19 outbreak came towards the tail-end of the review period, its impact was immediate and significant. Concerns that the global economy was facing an unprecedented event that would trigger a deep recession and a sharp fall in corporate earnings prompted market participants to switch into perceived safe haven assets such as government bonds and gold. The US dollar also attracted heavy inflows, especially against emerging market currencies.

With uncertainties growing and risk appetite falling sharply, equity markets came under heavy selling pressure, resulting in earlier made gains being significantly erased. In some cases, for example the UK, local equity markets finished in negative territory. In Europe, the outcome was more upbeat with the region registering small gains although the picture (for comparative purposes) was more mixed when returns were translated into the US dollar. In Japan, local investors nursed small losses after being in front for much of the review period. Similarly, emerging markets failed to hold onto their early advance. Although US stocks were not immune to February's global sell-off, declining sharply from their January record highs, they still posted healthy returns for the year under review. On a relative basis, growth stocks were in the ascendancy over value ones and large-caps outperformed their smaller peers. FAANG stocks also prospered over energy names, with sentiment towards the latter dented by oil price weakness.

Prior to the Covid-19 outbreak, equity markets had been pre-occupied with growing trade tensions, most notably between the US and China, but also with Europe as President Trump increasingly carried out his threat to impose tariffs on US imports in his drive to narrow the country's huge trade deficit. The prospect of a global trade war started to undermine investment decisions and the resultant drop in trade activity began to have an adverse impact on exporting nations such as China and Germany. With economic activity showing signs of weakening, pressure grew on central banks to cut interest rates. Many did with the US Federal Reserve leading the way with a series of reductions last summer.

The pivot by the worlds' central banks towards easier monetary policy helped fixed income markets to deliver positive returns. Unusually, all areas of the market did well with both risk assets (investment grade and high yield) and government bonds rallying. In many instances, yields on the latter hit record lows with demand for treasuries, bunds and gilts accentuated by the restarting of the quantitative easing engines in response to coronavirus.

Brexit

The UK left the EU on 31 January 2020, an event commonly referred to as Brexit. As at the date of this report, discussions remain ongoing between the UK and EU27 as to the precise nature of the future relationship. The Directors of the Fund do not believe that Brexit will present significant issues that cannot be mitigated, given the Fund will continue to be passported in the UK under the UK's Temporary Permission Regime. The Fund has registered its sub-funds under the Temporary Permission Regime and this will enable the Fund to continue offering those sub-funds to UK investors.
